The unpredictability in supply and demand due to COVID-19 has forced companies, small and large, to convert business investments from capital to variable expenses. The new demand in application workloads, data creation, analysis, and storage impacts businesses by rapidly drawing down their storage performance and capacity. IT requires a fast and economical approach to address these challenges with limited access to IT facilities—without compromising on the business or overlooking application architectures and criticality. HPE Cloud Volumes answers the call.

As a suite of enterprise cloud data services, HPE Cloud Volumes unlocks agility and innovation by empowering IT to move away from managing infrastructure, to simply consuming it. Organizations can spin up storage capacity in minutes and pay-as-they-consume in the cloud without compromising on enterprise SLAs.

Enterprise-grade performance, availability, and data integrity for business-critical applications

Seamless data mobility between on-premises storage and the public cloud

Advanced data reduction drives down actual storage consumed, optimizing cloud economics

In the wake of COVID-19, HPE Cloud Volumes makes it easier for businesses to support unpredictable demand, manage cash flow, and modernize data protection. To support businesses during this pandemic, Hewlett Packard Enterprise is offering the following promotion for HPE Cloud Volumes to April 30, 2021:

1

10 TiB

2
